Not illustrated. 1883 Excerpt: . . . together along the high road which led from the said Legnano to Montagnana, the footmen in front and the horsemen on their flank. They journeyed until they came close to the first ambush of the soldiers of the Seigneurie, who lay in a small village. But not suspecting anything, they passed beyond, and pushed on to within a short mile of Montagnana. Then the spy said to them: My lords, let me go on, and do you hold yourselves in all order here. I will find out what is doing in the town, so as to give you notice thereof. So they let him go, but far better would it have been for them to cut off his head; for he was no sooner arrived than he went to the Lord Messer Andrea Gritti, and said to him: My lord, I have brought you, with cords round their necks, the greater part of the forces of Legnano. And it is not possible for a single man to escape, if you will; for they have already passed your ambush, and are now a mile hence. Messer Andrea Gritti mounted forthwith, and his men likewise made ready, both horse and foot. Then hastening from the town, he sent forward about a hundred horsemen to skirmish; these soon found the French, who were mightily rejoiced, thinking that all their work was before them, and that the Proveditore was with this troop. The French horsemen began to charge, and the...
