John Hare Powel, devoted much of his life to the improvement of the breed of domestic animals. Other lovers of learning appear on both sides. Hares mothers father was a founder and trustee of the University of Pennsylvania and Hares father also was a trustee of the University. Hare was a voluminous writer not only in science but also in pure literature. He was a versificator like his first cousin, Joseph Shippen, and wrote political pamphlets and letters to the press. His father was a member of Pennsylvanias first constitutional convention and, like his son John, speaker of the state senate. Hares brother John also was a voluminous writer on agriculture and social topics. Hare was a hyperkinetic: enthusiastic, vivacious and agreeable in conversation, given to controversy and pressing claims on priority, rich in ideas and able to command the loyal cooperation of numerous students. In later life he departed more from the paths of inductive science showing a fondness for speculation and becoming a warm supporter of spiritualism. All of his work was marked by originality. Edgar F. Smith, 1917. The Life of Robert Hare; an American Chemist (1781-1858). Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Co. A ROLLING STONE. James Morris Morgan, b. in New Orleans, 1845, began his adventures at an early age. When I could barely toddle I strayed away from the house. At 5 years his family removed to Baton Rouge, where government soldiers were stationed, and these struck his imagination. With a negro...
