Japan, and four species from Australasia. This extension has proved of great value, not only from a palaeontological point of view, but also because of the important bearing such exotic types have had in the solution of questions relating to descent. The methods adopted in these investigations have already been fully explained (38, p. 33 et seq. ) and further details at this time are uncalled for. In 1896 the work had reached such a point that it was deemed desirable to make a preliminary statement of results. This appeared in a paper published in the Transactions of the Royal Society of Canada entitled the Generic Characters of the North American Taxaceae and Coniferae, in which it was shown that generic differentiations were possible. The diagnoses and artificial key to the genera thus published, have been in constant use since that time for the...
